New BullDoc clinic targets high schoolers

The KU School of Medicine has opened a clinic at Wyandotte High School, an ambitious effort to improve health among area teens.

The BullDoc Health Center, which debuted March 28, is run by second-year med students who head to the high school several times a month. Under the direction of a School of Medicine physician, they’ll provide immunizations, physicals and education about nutrition and obesity.

They’ll also diagnose and write prescriptions for acute and chronic conditions, mental health and reproductive health, among other treatments.

“One of the first things we get asked is how it’s going to be different from the nurse’s station at the school,” said Beka Mullen, a second-year med student, who helped lead the effort to open the BullDoc Health Center.

The University of Kansas Medical Center Police Department has earned national accreditation from the Commission on Accreditation for Law Enforcement Agencies (CALEA).

It is one of only four Kansas law enforcement agencies – and the state’s first university police department – to earn the status, considered “the gold standard in public safety.”

“We are gratified to have earned this recognition, which is the result of a three-year effort,” said Rick Johnson, medical center chief of police. “This is a voluntary program – no one forced us to do it. But we wanted to prove to ourselves and our community that we operate at the highest level of professional standards.”

The Police Department operates 24 hours a day and employs 75 full-time officers, supporting the safety of faculty, staff and students at the medical center. They also support patients, visitors and staff in The University of Kansas Hospital.

To earn accreditation, the department spent three years documenting procedures for its entire operation, demonstrating it met more than 200 standards. A team from CALEA visited in December to ensure compliance.

This is the department’s second major accreditation in recent years. In late 2010, its 28-officer Security Division was awarded the Program of Distinction, Level 1 accreditation. At the time, the Security Division was only the 13th hospital security group to be accredited, and the first in the Kansas City metro.

Treads & Threads targets lung cancer screenings

The 11th annual Treads & Threads gala – The University of Kansas Hospital’s party with a purpose at Kansas Speedway – will battle the single leading cause of cancer death: lung cancer.

Proceeds will boost the lung cancer program at The University of Kansas Cancer Center by establishing lung cancer screenings using low-dose CT scanning for at-risk patients. Funds also will provide a patient navigator for the new screening program.

Studies show this type of screening reduces lung cancer death by 20 percent when compared to traditional chest X-ray screenings.

Treads & Threads 2012

Sept. 7, Kansas Speedway

Headliner: Huey Lewis & The News

Details: Gourmet food from area restaurants, concert, dancing to Emerald City Band of Dallas

Sponsorships: 8-4704

Patron Passes: On sale in June at treadsandthreads.org

Treads & Threads 2011 netted a record-setting $785,000–plus for cancer patient care. Since 2002, the gala has raised nearly $5.5 million to create new patient programs and resource centers, purchase the latest cancer-fighting technologies, expand and upgrade facilities and more.

“Treads & Threads is about more than just buying equipment,” said Jeff Wright, vice president, Cancer Services. “The event’s success demonstrates enormous community support and commitment for cancer care – and that helps us recruit and engage the best and brightest physicians. Over the years, Treads & Threads has decidedly helped us build a stronger cancer program.”

Huey Lewis & The News returns for the 11th annual Treads & Threads. The Grammy winners headlined the gala in 2010, but torrential rains ended the performance shortly after they took the stage.
Cancer center names first physician-in-chief

Terance Tsue, MD, a distinguished otolaryngology-head and neck surgeon and researcher, has been named the first physician-in-chief for The University of Kansas Cancer Center.

In this position, Tsue (pronounced “sue-A”) provides clinical oversight at the cancer center.

“The clinical care program has a well-deserved reputation as one of the best,” said Tsue, who served on the faculty of the KU School of Medicine since 1996.

“I think there are tremendous opportunities to enhance our record of success in our merger with Kansas City Cancer Center and our close collaboration with the booming cancer research activity on campus. We can build upon the quality of multidisciplinary care, which has become the hallmark of our patient-focused program.”

The physician-in-chief position reports both to Roy Jensen, MD, cancer center director, and Bob Page, president and CEO of The University of Kansas Hospital.

“Terry Tsue has a track record of bringing different disciplines together to benefit patient care. He is both a caring physician and an outstanding researcher who will help both the clinical and research elements in the cancer center continue their spectacular record of quality and growth,” said Page.

At the KU School of Medicine, Tsue was endowed professor of Head and Neck Surgical Oncology and vice chairman of Otolaryngology-Head and Neck Surgery.

high school,” said Beka Mullen, a med student who helped lead the charge to open the clinic. “The biggest difference is that we can diagnose illnesses and other conditions, rather than relying on what’s already been diagnosed.”

Physicians involved in BullDoc include Family Medicine’s Allen Greiner, MD, and Josh Freeman, MD.

The BullDoc name borrows from the high school’s mascot, the bulldog, and the JayDoc Free Clinic, also run by medical school students. Like JayDoc, BullDoc is free of charge.

By targeting the community’s youth, BullDoc organizers hope the clinic can help turn around Wyandotte County’s health. The county is ranked the least healthy in the state. And several students treated during BullDoc’s first day couldn’t recall the last time they visited a doctor.

The clinic has been two years in the making for School of Medicine students and leaders. But Mullen said much of the credit for BullDoc goes to the high schoolers.

They helped complete registration forms, set up the clinic space and spread the word to other students. On opening day, some even donned white lab coats as they recorded data, checked in visitors and brainstormed ideas to improve the center.

“They wanted this so badly, and they were willing to do the work to make it happen,” Mullen said.

In Memoriam:

Leslie Ann Camacho

Leslie Ann Camacho, outpatient registration representative in The University of Kansas Cancer Center, died suddenly March 13. She was 35.

She had worked at the cancer center, The University of Kansas Hospital and KU MedWest for seven years.

Mrs. Camacho not only was skilled at her job but a joy to work with.

“She was knowledgeable, trusted and hardworking. Her responsibilities were vast and varied,” said Jill McDonald, Healthcare Information Technology Services, who had been Mrs. Camacho’s supervisor for five years.

“As a co-worker turned friend, Leslie always had a smile and a kind word, she was always ready to lend a hand wherever it was needed, and she never complained,” said Antigudra Davis Hawkins in Imaging, who worked side-by-side with her. “Our department will never be the same.”

Several of Mrs. Camacho’s immediate family also work at the cancer center and hospital. Co-workers say the family members’ strength after her death has been an inspiration.

New welcome

After five weeks of construction, The University of Kansas Hospital’s renovated main entrance formally reopened April 2, featuring a brighter look. That’s welcome news for patients, visitors and staff like transporters Edward Hawkins and Corinna Pacheco, who use the entrance frequently.

Wellness program benefits Mother Earth
The newest wellness challenge at The University of Kansas Hospital encourages you to “Love Your Mother” in two ways:
Reduce Your Impact. This includes activities that are environmentally conscientious, such as recycling, conserving energy and reducing your use of disposable items.
Increase Your Intake. This focuses on activities that benefit your physical health, such as eating more fruits, vegetables and whole grains, and making movement a part of your daily routine.
To register for the challenge, email loveyourmother@kumc.edu by Friday, April 13.
The challenge, which runs April 16-May 11, will count as one credit toward your wellness requirement for the Be Healthy: A Healthier You wellness program.

Teaching and Learning Technologies expands
Instructional Services in the University of Kansas Medical Center has been integrated with Teaching and Learning Technologies (TLT). The new unit is called Teaching and Learning Technologies Media (TLT-Media) and will report to David Antonacci.
The integration creates a single unit focused on supporting the various uses of technology in the medical center. Staff at The University of Kansas Hospital and The University of Kansas Physicians should email their requests for room reservations, AV needs and video to TLT-Media@kumc.edu, or call 8-7326.

TEDMED coming to campus screen
The massive TEDMED conference will be streamed live in Battenfeld Auditorium Tuesday, April 10, through Friday, April 13. TEDMED is a gathering of 1,300 thinkers and doers from 300 medical and nonmedical disciplines at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. They’ll explore ideas, innovations and challenges that will help shape the future of health and medicine.

Annual Street Fair set for Rosedale school April 21
The University of Kansas Medical Center Student Governing Council is planning the 13th annual KUMC Street Fair for April 21. The fair returns to Rosedale Middle School, 3600 Springfield St. in Kansas City, Kan., just a few blocks from campus.
“In past years we have taken the Street Fair to the community. It was such a great success, we are excited to hold it off campus again this year,” said Matt Farley, Street Fair chair and second-year medical student. “It allows us the opportunity to provide services, education and fun to members of the community in an accessible way.”
All proceeds benefit the Quindaro Clinic Food Pantry.
